- The mages of Moonglow seemed uninterested in talking, except for the one called Elyes, who'd much preferred if the Crown let the Council of Mages conduct their affairs in peace and reprimanded me for being a spy.

- The farmers west of Britain are in dire straits - the onion crop has failed, the onions have rotted from within, and they're asking for some gold. I gave them some.

- The miners at Mount Kendall report that the riches in the mountain "seems unending", unlike the health of the miners themselves.

- The 'chief sailor' at Vesper docks, Rolf, sent me out to find out happened with a ship, feared to be shipwrecked at Dragon Isle. I found a survivor there, Wilson, and he told me there's pirates north of North Jhelom, and generally.

- Moll, the rangers' chief, appreciated the interest, and assured me the rangers would remain loyal, and added that "a little recognition by the Crown would be welcome".
